Van Pelt Retiring

Shortly after the Michigan Legislature granted university status to Michigan Tech, President J. R. Van Pelt announced that he would retire at age 70 in

Dr. Van Pelt has recommended to Tech's Board of Control that management of the university be turned over to a younger man before his retirement and the Board had asked him, under the title of chancellor, to undertake certain duties for the university when the transfer occurs.

This provision for succession in the administration is typical of Bob Van Pelt and a capstone for the fine work he has done as Tech's president. A fine educator, he took over a state institution of higher learning which the state had neglected and denied the means of proper

It has been known as the School of Mines and that image seemed still to prevail at Lansing into the era when America plunged deeply into scientific studies and research. This was the state's only technical school of its kind and it had a splendid reputation in mining and engineering but the Legislature seemed to equate its needs with those of the Upper Peninsula mining industry, which had been declining. Missed to a harmful degree was the point that Tech was uniquely equipped to serve the needs of the new Age of Science out of its honored tradition of service to the earth sciences.

Tech had growth, but not in proportion to the burgeoning new dimensions of scientific and technical schooling in this country. The neglect of Tech was so severe in this period of new opportunities that its Forestry School was suspended from accreditation by the Society of American Foresters because its facilities were so far below a standard regarded by the Society as minimal for a modern technical education.

Fishing Visit

On a visit to Indian Lake State Park in 1951 Sweitzer noted the amount of camper business and the number turned away. He speculated that, "wherever there are people with money, wanting to spend it, there would be business and capital would be attracted to invest." He decided to build his trailer court and notes:

"I wasn't wrong. Even before there was a blade of grass growing when I first began building, customers started coming. Each year more came. When I'm full, I send them to campgrounds in the area, so the business stays here.

Area Assets The State Park has an average stay of 21/2 and I have an average stay of 31/2 days per these sightseeing facilities,"

Sweitzer observes. "You hear about the swallows of Capistrano. Well, I found a place on the Garden City Briefs Peninsula where mud is plastered against a building and each or own property in that area. I chie Carpenter. send quite a few visitors to Fayette State Park, which they much enjoy. Tourists seem so happy with the souvenir rocks they bring back from the trip."

Campground Regulations Sweitzer says he feels campgrounds should have adequate regulations to assure patron safety, the same as a up with the idea of turning a Mrs. Don Glasser, Terrace Ave. trailer court's regulations are utilitarian building into an with Mrs. Ingmar L. Levin as designed to protect the traveler. artistic show piece. Also, this holds down "junktype" businesses, he pointed

He suggests that lots should be large enough so ropes of one tent do not tie down on the adjoining lot, as fire could rapidly travel from one tent to another. Fire pits should be well designed for safety, and washing and sewage facilities should have ample disposal treatment to assure healthy leisure hours.

The fish potential in Indian Lake could probably be brought up with restocking, last year 400 walleyes were caught by a commercial fisherman and planted in the lake. However, there are no nets or other barrier to prevent fish from going down river from the lake, and then to Lake Michigan when flume gates are opened. The flume, of course, prevents fish from coming up river, he observed.

Indian Lake has many large fish, caught by spearing, such as the pike of the past few weeks, and a large number of small, pan fish. But the "medium-sizers that make good hook-and-line fishing are few," he explains. When parks report 2,400 persons were turned away, it should not be said the business was lost to the area. "Last year I got 1,500 of these and about 900 went to federal campgrounds or one of the five private campgrounds which have been laid out along the lake." Sweitzer first came to the area on a fishing trip in 1924. Indian Lake wasn't developed much as a resort area, with most concentrated on the south end. Parker's Landing was being operated in conjunction with the U. and I. Club. No charges were made, with income coming from sale of soft drinks and boat rentals. The State Park had not been established.

In his travels in the midwest, the south and the West, Sweitzer says he has found only one other state-California-which has direct competition by states

At 11 a. m., the park puts up "no vacancy" signs and after 6 p. m., gives literature which helps those turned away find private camp and trailer court facilities. Sweitzer says he has a small leaflet which he A former Chicago and Miami hands those leaving the park,
